Hey,

I didn't realize you were both trying to put the kybosh on the duct tape in general, I knew we had all talked about not putting it over the mouth but again did not realize you were trying to get rid of that entirely, sorry about that. But we did think it would be best to have something visual as an identifier in case someone loses the card or whatever, but I'll bring it up again with the kids today and see what they think. I can still print the cards out as I have the template and will talk to Kate about the script that Pip used to use for the announcements, thanks for getting the conversation started. I'll definitely keep you posted with what we will be doing, it will include posters, the art showcase by Josh's office and hopefully announcements that week. So once we have a better handle on things, which hopefully we will continue to work on today, I'll let you know.

Thanks!!!!

Hey there:

Ok, so we are not doing smoothies this year, but will help with facilitating DOS in any way.

Harkness and I really tried to put the kybosh on duct tape at all the past several years. It makes students a target, and it doesn't make sense to the message. It's up to you guys. Wearing a basic rainbow sticker might be nice to show support. Ofcourse, we will provide the cards to show to teachers.
