Government Healthcare Bill Comparison
Revised November 18, 2009

Several government healthcare bills have been proposed by various members of the 111th Congress. No bill has passed either the House or Senate but could come up for a vote at any time. We have identified at least 11 features that are common to most of the current bills, indicating that they are likely to be included in a final version. All Americans have the right and duty to become informed and have their voices heard about important bills that will affect the future health and stability of this Nation. This comparison is provided as an educational service of Liberty Counsel. Links to contact information for Congress are at the end of this summary.
